Southwestern New Mexico
ENVIRONMENTAL HEALTH
RESOURCE GUIDE

Developed by the Gila Resources Information Project

for
Office of Border Health/
New Mexico Department of Health

Environmental Health

Environmental health is defined as freedom from illness or injury related to toxic agents and other environmental conditions that are potentially detrimental to human health (The Institute of Medicine; in Nursing, Health, and the Environment, 1995). Environmental health focuses on the linkages between human health and the conditions present in the environment and all of its elements, including such things as: the air that we breathe, the water that we drink and bathe and swim in, the soil that we come in contact with, the food we consume, the housing we live in, and the landscape.

According to the World Health Organization, environmental hazards are responsible for about a quarter of all disease worldwide. There are a number of environmental health issues that confront counties in southwestern New Mexico, such as childhood lead poisoning, particulate matter air quality problems, high concentrations of fluoride, arsenic and radio nuclides in drinking water, leaking septic tanks, and environmental impacts from mining activities. This Environmental Health Resource Guide was developed to help citizens address environmental health issues in their communities.

Background

The Environmental Health Committee (EHC) of the New Mexico Border Health Council was established in 1994 and since then has worked towards improving the environmental health status of the New Mexico border population through community education, advocacy, and resource development. One of the objectives of the committee was to create resource guides of environmental health agencies in the southern part of New Mexico.

Acknowledgements

This Environmental Health Resource Guide was prepared by Marya Gendron, Allyson Siwik, Donna Stevens, and Harry Browne of the Gila Resources Information Project in fulfillment of a contract with the New Mexico Department of Health/Office of Border Health.

2. Air Quality

Am I allowed to burn trash?

Under the NM Open Burning Regulation, all burning of household waste is prohibited. Check with your local fire department on permits for open burning of yard waste.

Are emissions from our local industries hazardous to our health?

Emissions are gases and/or particles that are released to the air by a variety of activities, such as mining, construction, and manufacturing. EPA and NMED require that Industries control their emissions in order to prevent air quality problems and protect public health. To find out more about your air quality, visit the NMED Air Quality Bureau website (www.nmenv.state.nm.us/aqb/index.html) for local air quality monitoring information or call the AQB District III Office at (505) 524-6300 for information or to report possible emissions violations.

3. Animals*What do I do if I find a swarm or colony of bees?

You should stay calm, immediately leave the area, and keep children and pets away from the bees. You won't be able to tell the difference between regular honeybees and Africanized bees (i.e. killer bees). Do not try to control the bees yourself, but instead call your local pest control service. In case of emergency, call 911.

Is there a limit to the number of animals a person is allowed to have on his/her property?

There is no statewide limit, so you should check with your city or county code enforcement officer, property owners association or housing development covenants to see what restrictions apply in your area.

To whom do I report stray animals?

Call your local animal control office.

11. Indoor Air Quality

Should I be worried about radon in my home?

Radon is a naturally occurring, radioactive gas that is released from soil, rock and groundwater and can build up inside homes and buildings. Because it is very common, it is considered to be the second leading cause of lung cancer in the U.S. To find out if you live in an area of New Mexico with potentially high concentrations of radon or for more information on radon test kits, call the NMED Radiation Control Bureau at

(505) 827-1093 or visit www.nmenv.state.nm.us/nmrcb/radon.html

What do I do if I smell gas in my house or apartment?

If you suspect that you have a gas leak, call your local fire department and get out of the house immediately. For repairs or inspections for gas leaks, call your local gas company. If you live in an apartment, contact your apartment manager or landlord. Landlords are responsible for maintaining minimum housing standards.

Whom do I call to find out more about my local smoking ordinance?

Call your city or county code enforcement office.

Should I be worried about my child's asthma in his/her school?

Schools have the potential for poor indoor air quality, which can lead to increased asthma symptoms. You may contact your child's school to find out if the school is managing potential indoor air quality problems, such as mold and indoor use of pesticides. The EPA Tools for Schools Program is a valuable resource for improving indoor air quality: www.epa.gov/iaq/schools/.

14. Nuisance

What are nuisance problems and where can I file a complaint?

Most local municipalities and counties have “nuisance ordinances,” which are regulations that protect the public from any unsafe, potentially unsafe, noxious, or unreasonable activity that negatively impacts the community. Common nuisances include weeds, inoperable vehicles, junk, trash, and noise. If you think you have a nuisance problem in your neighborhood, call your city or county code enforcement officer to file a complaint.

Whom do I call to get rid of a car that no longer works?

Under many local nuisance ordinances, it is unlawful to keep any motor vehicle on your property that is abandoned, dismantled or not in operating condition. Check with your local wrecking company to find out how to dispose of your own inoperable vehicle.

21. Vector Control

How can I protect myself and my family from West Nile Virus and other mosquito-borne diseases?

The West Nile Virus is spread by the bite of a mosquito, which carries the virus from infected birds. The severe symptoms can include high fever, headache, neck stiffness, stupor, disorientation, coma, tremors, convulsions, muscle weakness, vision loss, numbness and paralysis. Mosquitoes breed in standing water. You should call your local vector control or public works department to report standing water on public property. You can prevent mosquito bites by wearing long sleeves, pants and socks, using mosquito repellent, and avoiding peak mosquito hours from dusk to dawn. You should also mosquito-proof your home by draining standing water and installing or repairing screens on doors and windows.
